has not been damaged. At the Connecticut River Power Co.'s dam at Vernon the ice gave way yester. day morning under the pressure of the jam combined with the wearing process of the water and the melting due to warm weather. A channel was broken through about o'clock and the general movement started at once, and it was not long before the river was comparatively clear, as the volume of the jam had been greatly reduced. The movement caused no appreciable increase in the depth of water and no damage whatever, and the height of water now running over the dam is around five feet, or about half what it was a highest point of the freshet.

Public interest now shifts to the ques tion of a new bridge, together with the choice of a site and a determination of the liability for the loss of the bridge which extended from the west bank of the river to the west bank of the island
